This class is just what its name implies, an introduction to Project Management at Mines. This is the first class in a series to help people increase their knowledge about project management at Mines.

The learning objectives of the course are:

- Having a common understanding of Project Management terms
- Having a familiarity with the Mines Project Delivery Process

The two-hour class starts with definitions to establish a common language relating to project management. It goes on to talk briefly about what project management is and then looks specifically at the Mines Project Delivery Process. This includes an on-line walk-through of the process, which looks at key processes and templates. Ample time is left for questions and discussion to ensure participants understanding of the topics.

Clayton Durkee, the Project Portfolio Manager, teaches the class. Clayton has a wealth of project management knowledge and experience from his many years of managing projects, programs and PMOs.

There are no prerequisites for this class. It is for anyone who will be leading or participating in projects or who just wants to have a basic understanding of the delivery process and how it works.
